Mandela's Release Sparks Drive For Unity In South Africa

The world's most famous former political prisoner isn't wasting time concentrating on the 27 years of hard labor he served. Instead, Nelson Mandela, with the eyes of the world focused keenly upon him, is advocating a racially united South Africa.

"I have cherished the ideal of a democratic and free society in which all persons live together in harmony and with equal opportunities. It is an ideal which I hope to live for and achieve, but if need be an ideal for which I am prepared to die," Mandela said when he was convicted of high treason in 1964 and sentenced to life in prison.

Many Black South Africans consider Mandela their leader, and he easily would win any race for political office if Blacks were allowed to vote.

But Mandela, 71, has offered to serve as mediator in arranging talks between the government and the African National Congress, which he helped organize in 1944. He urges the establishment of a constitution that gives voting rights to the country's 28 million Blacks that are equal to the rights of the 5 million Whites.

Mandela acknowledges his comrade Oliver Tambo as ANC leader, he's willing to work with any

IN CLASS

The days of a Dillard student are filled with hours and hours of classes. In class, students listen to lectures, participate in debates and class discussions, and of course—take exams.

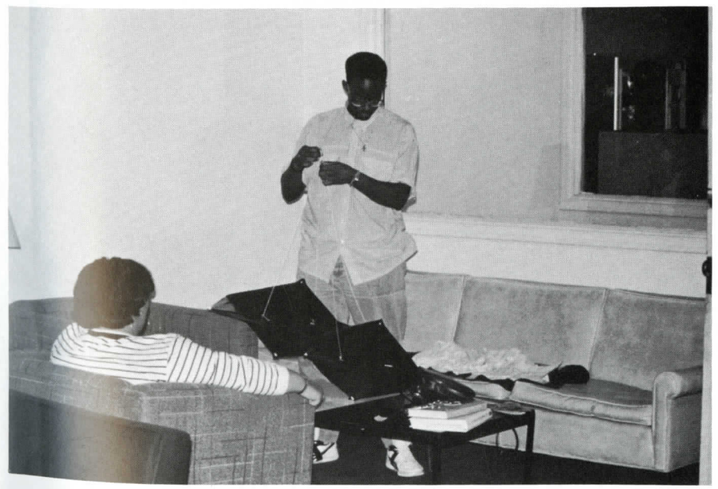

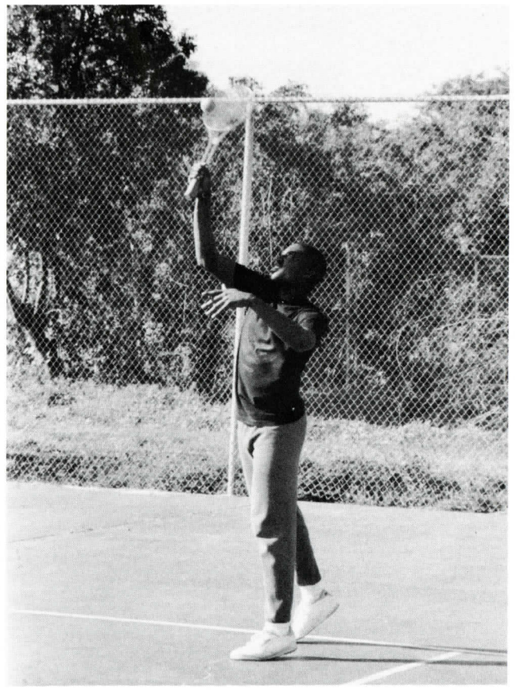

OUT OF CLASS

After class, different students do different things that include working, studying, or relaxing. Some on-campus students play cards in the lounge, usually Spades, play tennis, and eat in the cafeteria.
